

All in a day's and night's work

Icy winds blow swirling flakes of snow through the darkness of a winter's night. With temperatures predicted to plummet into the single digits, the weather is fit for neither man nor beast.

As you settle in for a good night's rest, you take a moment to glance out the window and shiver at the thought of being outdoors. You thankfully snuggle down in your nice, warm bed with the sounds of the cold, wintry night just a few feet away from where you rest.

Several hours pass. It's well after midnight by now, and you are in deep, peaceful slumber. Suddenly, a sharp blast of wind startles you awake, and you hope it doesn't take the roof off. Tall trees on the hill just behind your home sway back and forth as the wind gains momentum. And then it happens — a 60-foot-tall pine can no longer withstand the pressure and is taken down.

You are fully awake by now and are aware that total darkness surrounds you. You reach over to turn on your bedside table lamp, but nothing happens. You fumble for the flashlight in the table drawer and shine it on your watch lying on the table. It's a little after 2 a.m., and the electricity has been knocked out by the ferocious winter wind. The pine that crashed to the ground took the power line with it, even though it was outside the line's right of way.

Not too far away, a man is in a state of deep, restful sleep. It had been a long day for him after working outdoors for most of the day in freezing temperatures. Suddenly, he is awakened by the piercing ring of the telephone. He doesn't have to guess who is on the other end of the line. His instincts tell him there is trouble caused by the weather. The cooperative's after-hours dispatcher relates to him that calls are coming in from customers reporting their electric service has gone out. He rolls out of bed and gets dressed as quietly as possible, trying not to wake his family. And so, in the bitter cold night, in the blinding snow, he slips out the door and heads for his truck. He knows there's a job to be done.

This scenario is not unfamiliar to Pickwick employees. Our line crews do all that is humanly possible to keep the lights burning for the cooperative's customers in all weather conditions and face unpredictable situations on a routine basis. Their line of work is filled with potential hazards under the best of circumstances, but harsh weather and long hours without rest make the job even more dangerous.

While this is certainly not intended to take away from all the other dedicated employees in our cooperative family, it is simply meant to recognize our line crews who have such a tremendous amount of responsibility on their shoulders and do their jobs so well.

Employees complete Certified Power Executive Program

Four PEC employees recently completed the Certified Power Executive (CPE) program, sponsored by the Tennessee Valley Public Power Association (TVPPA).

TVPPA's Certified Power Executive is a unique program of professional certification specifically designed for management of public power distribution systems. It provides managers with a better understanding of their duties and roles in the utility industry.

The target group for the CPE program has been "redefined" as mid- to upper-level managers who have fundamental supervisory skills and are ready to proceed to the next level of leadership proficiency. Core competencies at this level include planning, organizing, allocating, delegating, scheduling, problem-solving and relating.

The recent graduates agreed that the CPE program is a very beneficial tool that can be used to acquire valuable knowledge and insight for utility industry employees. They felt the program provided them with the knowledge that will allow each to be a valuable asset to Pickwick Electric Cooperative.

Two competencies — business planning and public speaking — further distinguish members of this group.

The curriculum is designed to provide participants with the skills to meet the competencies outlined above.

All course requirements are to be completed within five years of starting the program.

Doyle attends lineman school

Logan Doyle has completed Apprentice Lineman Fundamental Training School in Atlanta, Ga. Through hands-on experiences, the 10-day school, which attracts students from all over the U.S., provides future linemen with a good understanding of their job responsibilities.

During the first day of school, students were issued tools they would use during their training. They also studied rules and regulations and watched training films.

The following day, the students attended a safety meeting and received instructions on pole-climbing and how to properly tie knots. They learned to tie 14 different knots, and each had to be tied in less than six seconds.

After that, it was off to the pole yard where each student started learning climbing techniques. Each practiced on 10-foot poles, and as they gained confidence at this level, students gradually worked their way up to 35-foot poles.

During the school, students also took 22 tests and were required to maintain a 70 average for a passing grade.

"We feel that this training is the best available for future linemen," said Pickwick Electric Cooperative President Karl Dudley. "We are confident that once the trainee completes this course he will be very knowledgeable of all aspects of the lineman position."

Logan agreed that the school was a "tough and demanding" 10 days, but said it was definitely worth it. He highly recommends this school to anyone who wants to become a lineman.

Logan is a 2005 graduate of McNairy Central High School. He lives in Chewalla and enjoys playing softball, hunting and fishing.

Congratulations, Logan.

Sandra Brush retires with 32 years of service

As we eagerly await the changes the new year will bring, so does Sandra Brush. She will be looking forward to something new in her life: retirement. Her last day of work was Friday, Jan. 27.

Brush, a native of McNairy County, began her employment with the cooperative on July 30, 1973, as consumer records clerk. She held this job until April 1979, when she was promoted to engineering clerk, where she remained until her retirement.

When Brush came to work in 1973, the cooperative was serving in excess of 11,000 members. Now, the cooperative has grown to almost 20,000 members with approximately 2,000 miles of lines to maintain.

When asked what was the most significant changes she had seen at PEC, she replied, "The most noticeable to me was the emergence of the computer age. I came to work at a time when everything was done by hand. Through the years everything has gradually moved to computers."

Over her 32 years, there have been some happy occasions to celebrate with members and fellow workers as well as some difficult times. Brush has experienced tornadoes, snow and ice storms and floods that forced the cooperative employees to work around the clock. But she says during her career at PEC, the good times have outweighed the bad.

During Brush's career at PEC, she has worked for five different managers — William M. Roberts, T. Wayne Brown, Noel Landreth (who served as acting manager on two different occasions), Leslie Gwin and current President Karl Dudley.

"Sandra's tenured experience will certainly be missed at PEC, but we are all proud to see her reach this milestone," Dudley said. "We truly appreciate all the hard work that she has contributed to the cooperative. We wish her a happy retirement."

Brush has three children and four grandchildren with whom she plans to spend more time.

"I've been blessed by my Lord with a good job and good life," Brush said.

"I'm fortunate to have worked with some good and kind people. But now I'm looking forward to retirement and doing some things I have a desire to do."

In memory

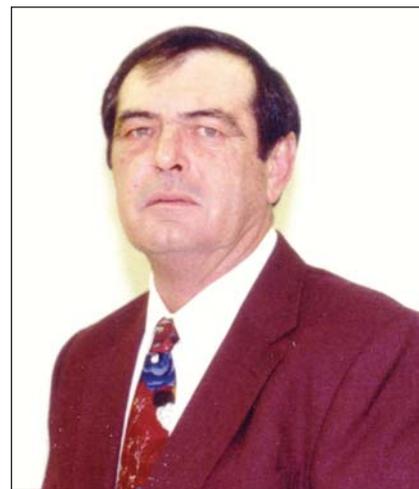

Pickwick Electric Cooperative Director David Lawson passed away on Friday, Dec. 30, 2005, at his home in Ramer.

Mr. Lawson was elected to the PEC board on Aug. 19, 1997. He was the former owner of Lawson Welding Inc. in Ramer and a U.S. Army veteran of the Vietnam War. He was a charter member of Unity

Baptist Church, where he served as a deacon.

Mr. Lawson is survived by his wife, Janice Suggs Lawson; two sons, Chris and Brandon, both of Haleyville, Ala.; and four grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Sunday, Jan. 1, 2006, at the Shackelford Funeral Home Chapel with burial in the Mt. Vernon Cemetery near Ramer.

McNairy County Family and Community Education clubs make a difference

For more than 75 years, McNairy County Family and Community Education (FCE) clubs have shared common goals with other clubs across the state to learn through shared experience, improve home and community life, strengthen adult education and promote projects that enhance family and community life.

Through their rich history, these clubs have grown from small community groups to a worldwide network. In the past, these clubs were known as Home Demonstration Clubs and Homemakers.

Today, McNairy County has five FCE clubs — Acton, Lawton, Leapwood, Stantonville and Selmer — with a membership of more than 100.

McNairy County FCE clubs meet monthly. Each meeting includes an education program that focuses on a subject relating to family and consumer science. Topics include family economics, healthy eating, money management, environmental education and safety.

Community service is the cornerstone for FCE clubs. Each year they provide the opportunity to make a difference in the lives of families by participating in projects that meet the needs of each local community.
